

Chapter-5

E-mail

We are living in a globalized world where awe-inspiring advancements in communication and information technology have made it extremely easy to convey messages to or share information with the people sitting in any part of the world within no time. People use phone calls, video-chat, text messages, e-mail and fax to share information.

What is an E-mail: An e-mail, the short form of electronic mail, is the electronic form of written correspondence or communication. It is the digital version of letter and can be sent instantly with the help of an internet connection. Unlike a letter, it is the soft copy of a letter and can be sent to multiple receivers simultaneously. It is not only the quickest method of conveying messages or sharing information, but also environment friendly as it saves paper and envelop. It is also cost effective as it does not require postal charges. One can share text, images and other graphics using an e-mail. One can attach multiple files with a single e-mail. The best thing about e-mail is that one can keep a record of one's received and sent e-mails safe in one's account, and delete the ones which are not required any more. Most organizations, either government or private, prefer using an e-mail instead of paper letters.

One must create an online e-mail account in order to be able to receive and send an e-mail. In the absence of an e-mail account, one can use someone else's account.

As e-mail is the electronic form of letter, it may be formal as well as informal depending on the person to whom one sends it. The language, style and tone of the e-mail depend on whether it is formal or informal just as in the case of a letter.

Points to remember while writing an e-mail

1. Write correct e-mail address of the sender as well as the receiver. Remember that the e-mail addresses must be written in small letters without any space between letters, words or symbols.
2. The subject of the e-mail should be clearly stated and relevant to the message or information conveyed.
3. The salutation should be appropriate according to formal or informal e-mail.
Formal e-mail: Dear sir/Madam or Dear Sirs/ Dear Mr./Miss/Mrs.
Informal e-mail: Dear,/Dear (Mom/Dad/Brother/Sister)
4. Write the message as briefly as possible without missing important information. Use short sentences and simple vocabulary to avoid any mis-communication. Use small paragraphs if required.
5. Organize the message to be conveyed in appropriate sequence in terms of priority of information.
6. Use grammatically correct sentences; avoid using slangs, abbreviations or contractions.
7. Ensure that the files attached are not infected with virus.
8. End your e-mail with a complimentary close such as 'Bye, take care' 'With love', Best wishes' 'Best regards' 'Regards' etc.
9. Write suitable subscription such as 'Yours obediently/ truly/ faithfully/ sincerely' depending on the type of e-mail: formal or informal.
10. Write your name, designation, address, contact number at the bottom in case of formal e-mail. Write your name in case of informal e-mail.

Dear Ankita

My joys knew no bounds when I read your name in the newspaper on top of the list of meritorious students. I am extremely happy that you have got the first rank in your state board examination. Congratulations to you on this grand success! Convey my heartiest congratulations to your parents and grandparents. They all must be proud of you. I am really proud to have a friend like you.

This is the result of all the hard work you have been putting in for many months. Finally, your hard work has borne fruit. This demands a great celebration. When are you giving me a treat? You have brought laurels to your parents and teachers. My parents are also very happy to hear of your grand success. They send their congratulations to you and your parents.

I am sure you will continue to work hard in the same way in all your future endeavours. My best wishes are always with you. Convey my best regards to your parents and grandparents.

With lots of love and best wishes
Yours sincerely
Ankita
